Some people call it Karma. Some call it luck. I just know I thought it was hilarious (even though I shouldn't and I almost feel guilty for feeling satisfaction). It was one of those rare moments when things seem to work just the way you wish they would. Here's what happened.

I was leaving work here at the church building the other day headed across town. As many of you know, it is kind of hard to see to the west around the cedar tree when you pull out onto Omega but, as always, I did my best to make sure I was clear. And when I pulled out, as I got about 1/2 way through the turn, another car crested the hill still about 1/4 mile or so out so I just stayed in the left lane upon completing my turn into it. I don't know why the other driver felt compelled to do this, but instead of changing lanes or simply slowing down to the posted speed limit, he pulled up mere inches away from my back bumper, turned on his lights, and proceeded to ride there for several blocks through town. Finally, with a slap of his steering wheel and a hand gesture to me, he pulled over and began to rapidly accelerate to pass me...just as a car pulled out from the hospital slowing him down. That car turned at the corner so he again began to race up that lane, by now hunched over the steering wheel and just as he was catching up to me, had to slow down for the semi that was stopped at the light in his lane. By now, I could see a stroke waiting to happen and sure enough, as he buzzed around that truck and got back into his lane and began rapidly trying to pass, we came up to the Y in front of Dairy Queen. Now, obviously, he was not from around here because it suddenly dawned on him that he was in the wrong lane and he came to a fish-tailing, screeching halt waiting on all the cars in my lane to pass (we had a semi at the light too) so that he could get back where he needed.

I turned at the next corner so I don't know what happened after that, but it got me to wondering. What would put you in the frame of mind that you would be so rude to others endangering both yourself and them? Why would the few seconds you may save make the behaviors acceptable? Why would you do that?

I know that there are some people that get a thrill out of such behaviors (riding bulls, swimming with sharks, and wrestling alligators too), but for the most part, how many people driving in the fast lane take the time to appreciate God's creation? To worship God? To praise Him? Or even to find the peace that comes from simply abiding in His presence? You see, when we get caught up in those moments, we lose our joy and peace and happiness. We lose our opportunity and ability to bear witness to His creation or to tell others the Good News of the Gospel. And for what? This week, stay focused on what REALLY matters. Not the fast road, but the narrow one. In Christ, Todd
